UK General Election 2017

The UK general election is just days away, so we've rounded up some of the interesting things voters have told us over the past few weeks...

Only two in ten (19%) of you intend to do any campaigning in the build up to election day.

 Do read

 Don't read

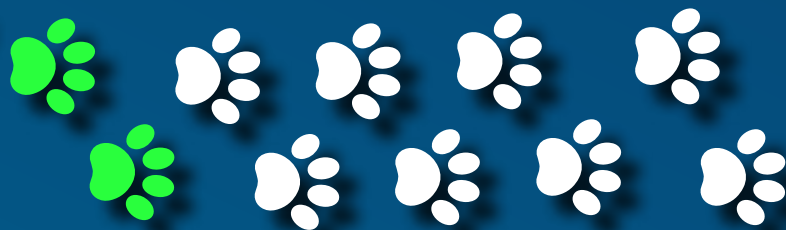

Two-thirds (67%) of you either don't read political manifestos, or don't know what they are.

Only a quarter (26%) of you know how many seats are in the House of Commons (there are 650).

Less than one in twelve (8%) of you have considered standing as a candidate in a UK General Election. Interestingly, three times more men (13%) than women (4%), had considered it.

Bring the dog! One fifth of you (22%) correctly realise that dogs are allowed in polling stations, so long as they're well-behaved!

Talking of being well behaved, you're allowed a polling day Pinot or a Ballot Box beer because - as 40% of you correctly realise - you can vote under the influence of alcohol, so long as you don't cause a disruption!

More than half (52%) of you think EU citizens who live and work in the UK shouldn't be allowed to vote in the UK General election.

More than half of all you believe EU citizens living and working in the UK should not be allowed to vote in UK General Election.

Almost three in ten (29%) think you need to take your ID with you to the ballot box to cast your vote in the General Election.

Nearly half (49%) of the British public are concerned that the UK General Election could fall victim to outsider influence.
